

College Board Follow-Up: Key Areas of Focus and a Spotlight on Tools & Resources

Elevating Parental Engagement to Parental Advocacy

In order to see real breakthrough in bridging the gap, it is necessary for parents to be engaged and assertive with the school system, especially for traditionally underserved groups such as 1st generation, Latinos, African American and Native American students. Given some families' lack of experience and knowledge about where to go for support, one of the College Board's goals is to build confidence within parents to more actively engage in their child's education. However, while our messages often focus on ensuring that their child receives quality education, they sometimes fall short of encouraging a more active participation in their schools and communities to advocate on behalf all students. This is where collaboration with schools, districts and college access organizations are essential.

Underscored below are a few resources with embedded website links and tools to help bridge the divide:
